PSC Energy Forum Set for May 12th in Madison

MADISON – The Public Service Commission (PSC) is inviting citizens in the Madison area to a public forum on Wednesday, May 12th to learn more about where their electricity will come from over the next several years.

Everyone interested in Wisconsin's energy future should attend the informational forum:

Wednesday, May 12th
7:00 to 9:00 p.m.
UW- Madison Memorial Union
800 Langdon Street
Madison, Wisconsin

The PSC, an independent state agency that regulates Wisconsin utilities, will share information from Wisconsin's Draft Strategic Energy Assessment, Energy 2010. It provides information from utilities about the anticipated demand for energy, plans for construction of power plants and transmission lines, and ways renewable energy sources fit into Wisconsin's energy future. The information looks out to the year 2010.

A panel of individuals from the Madison area will lead the program with a discussion of local energy needs and challenges. There will also be a computer simulation session at the forum to help people see how different energy alternatives impact the environment, reliability and rates.

More information on Energy 2010 and the public forum can be found at the PSC website at <http://psc.wi.gov>, click on SEA2010.
